2024 RESOURCE BOOKLET

Prepared by the Turning the Tide
Violence Intervention Program

Services for Victims of Violence

Violence and abuse come in many forms – from community youth and gun violence to intimate partner violence (IPV), child abuse, sexual assault, elder abuse and mass violence.

Did you Know?

- South Carolina has one of the highest homicide rates in the U.S.
- Violence is one of the leading causes of death for children, teens and young adults in the U.S.
- Community gun violence is the leading cause of death for Black male youth and young adults in the U.S.
- 1 in 4 women will experience sexual violence and/or intimate partner violence during her lifetime.
- 1 in 7 men will experience intimate partner violence during his lifetime.
- 1 in 4 children have experienced abuse or neglect at some point in their lives, and 1 in 7 children have experienced abuse in the past year.
- Approximately 1 in 10 Americans 60 years and over have experienced some form of elder abuse.
- Violence increases the risk of disability, mental health problems, substance abuse, chronic pain, experiencing further violence, poor outcomes in school and work, as well as poverty.

No one should have to experience violence, abuse or neglect. MUSC wants you to know that we care about your health and safety and encourage you to talk with your health care providers if you are experiencing violence or abuse. People have a variety of needs after experiencing violence to address physical injury, emotional trauma, family support and counseling, legal and financial support, safety planning, transitioning back to work or school, and obtaining basic needs like food and housing. There are many services at MUSC and in the community to help you, your children and your family.

Response to Trauma & Loss

A traumatic event is a threatening, frightening, dangerous and/or violent event that can cause physical and/or emotional harm. These can include serious injuries, illnesses, psychological abuse, witnessing or experiencing violence, or having the sudden loss of a loved one or friend. It is normal to experience new feelings and changes after trauma. Sometimes these are positive like stronger relationships and support, appreciation for life, newfound purpose, and personal growth, while others can be distressing including anxiety, depression, difficulty sleeping, fear of people and places, flashbacks, trouble concentrating, and disrupted relationships.

These distressing feelings and experiences can sometimes improve after a few weeks, but if they persist over a month or are severely impacting your mental health, you or your loved one may benefit from emotional support and counseling by a trained professional.

Some responses to grief (loss of a loved one) include:

- Sadness and loneliness
- Resentment and anger
- Fear and anxiety.

Over time these may resolve or fluctuate, or people may find themselves accepting the loss of a loved one. They may also feel connected to the loved one even though they are not here, find comfort in the positive memories, and feel like they are healing. There is not a “normal” path or time period for this process. Sometimes people experience longer grief or complicated grief, especially after losing a loved one to violence.

Signs of complicated grief can include:

- Trouble accepting the death
- Inability trusting others
- Numbness and detachment
- Increased agitation, bitterness or anger
- Feeling like life is empty or meaningless
- Believing the future is hopeless

While some of these thoughts are normal after experiencing the loss of a loved one, if they are severely impacting your health and mental health, or persisting after a year, counseling services may be helpful.
